With the first breath of Autumn, there is a lightness of the heart that amplifies a time for togetherness.

There is an awareness of the change in the air. Each detail of nature becomes a thing of marvelous beauty. Emily Dickinson is the epitome of lyrical prose that observes the ebb and flow of nature in relation to the depth of the soul. With this inspired menu we honor her words that were for so long kept in the dark. We hope you enjoy exploring her world with us.

“Besides the Autumn poets sing. A few prosaic days. A little this side of snow. And that side of the Haze... Grant me, Oh Lord, a sunny mind—thy windy will to bear!”
