SOTOL Y LECHUGUILLA

Sotol is produced throughout Chihuahua, Coahuila, and Durango using the same, traditional techniques seen in Mezcal production. Though similar in taste, Sotol does not fall within the category of “agave” spirits as it is made from the Dasyliroton, or Desert Spoon—a separate genus within the asparagaceae family. In flavor, Sotol is grassy, with notes of earthy root vegetable and wet stone.

Lechuguilla is made within the Sotol-producing states of Northern Mexico but distilled from indigenous agave rather than the Desert Spoon. This relatively unknown spirit category is produced in micro batches and offers flavors that twist between rich earth and ripe tropical fruit.

RAICILLA

Produced in western Jalisco where, by law, a distillate cannot be bottled and sold as “Mezcal” even if it was historically referred to as such. Though made like other traditional mezcals, longer fermentation periods often contribute funky, sour, and lactic notes to the final spirit. Think: overripe papaya, blue cheese, and brine!
