Where To Eat This New York City Restaurant Week

New York City Restaurant Week returns on January 21, offering two-course lunches for $26 and three-course dinners for $42 at hundreds of restaurants across the city. Running through February 8, the twice-yearly stretch of specials not only allows diners to grab a seat at an otherwise prohibitively expensive eatery, but also brings out some creative seasonal specials from kitchens eager to celebrate Restaurant Week. Yes, the ingredients featured on the prix-fixe menus are occasionally lower in price than standard menu items, but the quality and technique with which they are prepared is identical to the standard any diner should expect. Book a table at one of these New York City restaurants for a great deal this winter.

Kingside

Dinner at this midtown bistro during Restaurant Week is the perfect pre-Broadway option or after work treat. Menu options will include sunchoke bisque, kampachi crudo, winter leaves salad, braised short rib with soft polenta, a sushi platter and pumpkin cheesecake for dessert.

Irvington

Just above Union Square, Irvington will serve both lunch and dinner menus. Starters will include options like burrata with citrus and fennel salad or mushroom bisque with spiced goat cheese, with mains like house-made tagliatelle in kale and walnut pesto and pan-roasted salmon with farro.
