DIVINE RABBITS

Mijenta Blanco Tequila, Pacífico Cordial, Lacto Fermented Tomato Water, Lime

Party legends of ancient Mexico inspired our next cocktail. The Centzon Tōtōchtin, or 400 Rabbits were the many children of Mayahuel, goddess of alcohol and fertility.

Mayahuel reared her children on polque, the fermented beverage from the agave plant. These mischievous and inebriated rabbits then appeared wherever lively parties were in full swing and made their presence known.

Our cocktail deconstructs the michelada, sangrita and paloma and puts them back together for a sweet, savory and refreshing party delight.

FLORA & FIRE

Siete Misterios Mezcal, Leblon Cachaca, Aperol, Yellow Chartreuse, Strawberry

Serpents are a prevalent motif. Our cocktail sheds light on the Boitatá snake of Brazil.

This majestic creature served to protect the Brazilian forests and wild animals from people who intended to destroy their lush, beautiful natural habitats.

Legends say the snake may turn into a flaming wooden trunk that targets the humans who set fires to the forests.

Subtle smoke and floral notes in our cocktail honor this forest guardian in a crushable way.

ETERNAL RETURN

Père Magliore Calvados, Montenegro, Mancino Secco, Pomegranate Honey, Lemon, Greek Yogurt

At times, mythology played a role in explaining nature. Societies depended on the seasons and a bountiful harvest in order to thrive.

Ancient Greece explained the seasons with Persephone's first bite in Hades' underworld. He tricked her with a juicy pomegranate, which had the power to entrap her into staying. The world became cold and barren, and crops died.

Whenever Persephone went to Olympus to live with her mother, Demeter radiated from happiness and the land became fertile again and fruitful through the months of spring and summer — the eternal cycle of the nature's death and rebirth with the seasons.

Persephone's story lives on in our cocktail with pomegranate honey and greek yogurt washed apple brandy, inviting you to enjoy a lush-mouthfeel sour.
Two Arrows

Grey Goose Vodka, Ten to One Light Rum, Pineau de Charantes, Turmeric, Mango

Love, lust, and passion are parts of being human, so it’s natural that cultures symbolize them.

The Vedic version was a god named Kama, also a symbol of the spring season, whose companions were humming bees. He spread feelings by shooting five flower tipped arrows made of sugar cane at gods and humans alike.

Two of his most potent arrows were the Amra, or mango blossom, which created infatuation, and jasmine, which created love sickness. We’ve combined some of these flavors for an enchanting cocktail that inspires love at first taste.

Passion for the Run

Barsol Pisco, Lustau Blanco, Cocchi Americano, Campari, Raspberry, Leather

Our cocktail journey next takes us to the home of the Morochucos, the legendary Peruvian cowboys.

In the Ayacucho region of Peru, there is a famous lagoon called Razuhuillca, haunted by a massive bull that emerged from the depths to cause destruction.

To protect the townspeople, an elderly woman swam to the bottom of the lagoon, lured the bull into an iron cage, and trapped it inside with a chain.

The bittersweet notes of our negroni-style cocktail represent her sacrifice to save the town. We age it in a leather bota to add depth, complexity, and aroma.

Behind the Mask

Nikka Days Whisky, George Dickel Bourbon, Amontillado, Mancino Rosso, Clarified Chai Ginger Cordial

Drink in the Japanese urban legend of Kuchisake-onna, a vengeful ghost who takes the form of a beautiful woman with the lower half of her face covered. She stopped people on the street and asked if they thought she is pretty. If they said yes, then she removed the mask to reveal she has been cut from ear to ear. She would ask again and then finish off her victims with a pair of scissors. The only way to escape was to throw candy at her and run away.

Our cocktail evokes this story as it is clean and seductive, but has an unexpected kick of ginger that adds a spicier dimension. Its garnish is the candy needed to make your clever escape.

Daylight in a Box

Woodinville Bourbon, J. Rieger Whiskey, Rhubarb, Cardamom, Coconut

The last story sheds light on the Native Tlingit myth of how Raven stole the sun, moon, and stars that were held in boxes by the Head of the River.

One by one, he released each source of light into the dark sky to illuminate the universe, benefiting all the people and animals in it.

Our three-ingredient stirred cocktail expresses bright, summer flavors with bourbon from the Pacific Northwest, the same region as its origin story.
