

CRAIG POGSON

WHAT'S NOW

The revered restaurateur serves as managing partner of newly rebranded La Goulue

WHAT'S NEXT

The Upper East Side hot spot is buzzing once again thanks to Pogson's spirited personality

"My grandfather was always in a perfectly made three-piece suit. I have taken his gentlemanly stylish influence with me throughout my own journey, perhaps adding just a touch more color. I owned my own bespoke clothiers in Mayfair, London in the 'Naughties.' I probably went a little overboard with dressing myself, and still have closets full of fun and timeless bespoke pieces. I have never been close to this fulfilled. Joining La Goulue again, building the entire restaurant for a year, and being part of such an iconic and fun establishment, has been a wonderful dream. La Goulue is my primary focus for the foreseeable future, though as part of a five-strong group of established and esteemed restaurants, who knows what we can achieve!"
