There's really no upside to cooking Thanksgiving dinner in New York City, especially if you're the kind of person who, for 364 days of the year, uses your undersized oven exclusively for sweater storage. Frankly, even if you could manage dinner, your guests are hardly going to enjoy squeezing around the coffee table that can barely hold your nightly Seamless order.

Nope, this Thanksgiving, you're going out -- especially if your visiting family is paying. Here are all the best places in New York City to feast on Thanksgiving. Bonus: Almost all of these feasts are south of $100 per person, leaving you some holiday cash to, um, buy some bigger pants?

Let the a la carte and prix fixe menus at this recently reopened historic brasserie transport you to Paris for the holiday. The set menu will include a creamy lobster bisque, foie gras agnolotti in sage butter, pear and gorgonzola salad, and a roasted organic turkey with mashed potatoes, brussel sprouts, stuffing, and gravy. Dessert, the most important part of any French meal, will include a pecan mascarpone napoleon and pumpkin cinnamon layer cake.
