

ENTERTAINMENT

You can still have a big New Year's Eve in NYC — if you have enough cash

By Melanie Gray and Melissa Klein

December 28, 2020 | 12:02pm | Updated

A clear view

The Watermark at Pier 15 downtown is already 75% booked for its Dec. 31 offering: 22 glasshouses ranging from $500 to $2,000, depending on the table size. Each is heated and lit, with the Manhattan skyline as a backdrop.

They'll do two seatings — one from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m., the other from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., spokeswoman Dianna DelPrete told The Post. Reservations close when the space runs out.

For their money, early partygoers get a bottle of Moët Champagne for the table, hats, noise-makers and snacks including coconut shrimp, crab spring rolls, boneless wings and guacamole and chips.

The late crowd pays more but gets more — a complimentary Champagne welcome reception, a premium special cocktail open bar and higher-end eats like smoked salmon and spicy tuna tartare.

Jumbo screens will show old Christmas movies and the fun includes a mock ball drop, DelPrete said.

But lights will be out by 10 to stay within coronavirus restrictions.

SEE ALSO

Times Square is ready to (virtually) party like it's 2021