5 Unbelievable New York City Brunches

Every New Yorker knows that brunch is the most important meal of the week — and nothing short of an institution in the city. Whether you're a fan of the sweet or the savory, we've got you covered with five of our favorite brunch spots that pack a punch so heavy you just may have to skip dinner.

Viceroy New York

With a lively bar scene, subway-tiled floors and edgy, original takes on typical brunch classics (the breakfast pizza topped with eggs, cheese and maple bacon is a must-try), Kingside almost seems too cool for its Midtown address. Chef Marc Murphy's new American cuisine pairs perfectly with a renowned bar program of handcrafted cocktails that will help you start the weekend off right. End your meal with the King Bar, the restaurant's own homemade candy bar comprised of chocolate caramel layers and roasted blackberries.
