Ernest Hemingway and Key West

Had it not been for a tardy delivery of an automobile, Ernest Hemingway's 10-year love affair with Key West might never have happened. Key West was to have been just a stopping-off point for Hemingway when he arrived on the ferry from Havana in 1928. But the Ford automobile that should have been waiting at the docks was delayed, so the embarrassed car merchant offered the author accommodations at the Trevor and Morris Apartments located above the dealership. During his stay there, Hemingway worked on "A Farewell to Arms" and became captivated by the island's easygoing ambiance. What he discovered, heralded the beginning of the most prolific period of his career and inspired him to use Key West as the locale for "To Have and Have Not" - his only novel set in the United States. In a short time, Hemingway moved into a Spanish colonial villa at 907 Whitehead Street., his home through December 1939. He wrote many of his best-known works in the second-story writing studio that adjoins the house. Among them were "Death in the Afternoon," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "The Green Hills of Africa," and "The Snows of Kilimanjaro." Following his death in 1961, the unpublished manuscript that was to become "Islands in the Stream" was found in a vault in the property's garage.

When Ernest Hemingway left Key West in 1939, his literary reputation and his larger-than-life persona were securely established. Just as he had been enriched by his years on the island, so was the island enriched by his presence. Credited with establishing Key West as a literary haven, Hemingway left a legacy that remains vibrant today.
